ABSTRACT

The resource guide lists approximately 700 print materials and audiovisual programs (1970-1979) designed to support training efforts for parents of handicapped children. Intended for parent training, for direct parent use, and/or for professional training, the materials are organized into four categories (sample subtopics in parentheses): impact on families, available support services, resource and equipment, and characteristics, diagnosis, and education of 10 exceptionalities; materials to help parents foster their child's development at home; information on parent/school relationships (parents' rights and responsibilities, development of parent involvement programs); and resources for planning for the future (postschool services). Each citation includes title, author, date, price, format information, and a brief description. A final section lists organizations providing services to families with handicapped children. (CL)

INTRODUCTION

The Eastern Pennsylvania Regional Resources Center for Special Education is a federally funded project which, in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Department of Education, provides services and training to those involved in the education of exceptional children. With the publication of this guide, we are responding to a priority area of need and interest identified by the Bureau of Special Education, and by educators working with parents. To provide the resource support to this commitment, we have acquired almost 700 print materials and audiovisual programs designed to directly and indirectly assist parents in helping their exceptional children. This book is intended as an introduction to the collection and a resource guide for educators and other persons who serve as parent trainers. It identifies a core of parent resource materials which can be used to support current training efforts or to begin new ones.

Content

The listings of parent materials in this guide are contained in Chapters II-V. Chapter II, "About Handicaps", includes information on the characteristics, diagnosis, and education of all exceptionalities, as well as information on the impact handicaps have on families, support services that are available, and resources and equipment for children with special needs. Chapter III, "Teaching the Child at Home", includes materials which enable parents to foster the intellectual, physical, emotional, and social development of their exceptional children at home. Chapter IV, "Parent/School Relationships", includes material on parents' rights and responsibilities, the skills needed for conferences and counseling, and the development of parent involvement programs. Chapter V, "Planning for the Future", identifies resources to help parents plan for their children after they leave the educational system. Chapter VI lists organizations which provide services to families with handicapped children. Chapter VII is a directory of publishers' addresses, and Chapter VIII is a title index.

The Use of Materials

The materials listed in this guide can be used in at least one of three ways: for parent training, for direct parent use, and/or for professional training. Parent training materials are designed for use by trainers in their work of teaching parents how to help their exceptional children. Some of these materials are complete workshops or training packages; others are intended to supplement existing programs. Parent use materials, as the name implies, are intended for use in the home. These resources are included to assist trainers in their educational and advising efforts. Professional training materials are intended to help trainers in developing some of the skills useful in working effectively with parents.

The materials included here were selected because of their applicability for use by those who work with the families of exceptional children. They have not, however, been evaluated and they are not endorsed by the Regional Resources Center. Having been published between 1970-1979, the materials are current and represent a broad range of cost and levels of sophistication.

How to Use This Guide

Instructional and training materials in this guide are grouped by subject, and then listed alphabetically by title. The first page of Chapters II, III, IV, and V describe the scope of that section and list all of the subcategories it contains. Each of the 638 citations in this guide is numbered consecutively, and the final page of each category lists the citation numbers of other materials that also pertain to that topic. Readers wishing to locate a specific material can use the title index in Chapter VIII.

Each of the citations in this guide conforms to the following format:

> ① 253. CAN'T YOUR CHILD SEE? Scott, E. University Park Press. 1977. 201 pp. $8.95. ②
>
> ③ FORMAT: Book
>
> DESCRIPTION: A book for parents of blind children which offers information and guidelines on the diagnosis of vision problems, differences in development in blind and sighted children, early intervention, education, play and family problems. Includes a chapter on multihandicapped children. R.L.: Moderate. ④
>
> ⑤ RRC CODE: 7 UNIPAP 01

1. The consecutive citation number in this guide.

2. The price of the material at time of purchase.

3. Format indicates whether the material is a pamphlet, booklet, book, film, audio or video tape, or kit, and the contents of kits are listed.

4. R.L. specifies the reading level of print material. It is included only for parent use materials. Reading levels were initially determined using the Fry Readability Scale, and then converted to the following standards:

   Low is equivalent to a 1st to 4th grade reading level.

   Moderate is equivalent to a 5th to 8th grade reading level.

   High is equivalent to a 9th to 12th grade reading level.

5. RRC CODE is the inhouse location code.

II. ABOUT HANDICAPS

The materials in this portion of the guide are intended to help parents understand their exceptional child's handicap, the impact it has upon the family and the many support resources available to them and their child. Some of the items describe individual exceptionalities, their diagnoses, and the medical and/or educational prescriptions most often provided for children with these handicaps. Other materials provide information about the specialized equipment, aids, agencies and services designed to provide assistance to the child and the family. In addition, this section includes resources to help parents explore the attitudes, feelings and coping skills commonly occurring among families of handicapped children.

Trainers working with parents will find that many of the resources will help them to develop a more thorough understanding of the day-to-day impact that the child has upon the family. Many of these materials could be recommended for use at home and could also become part of a borrowing collection for parent use.

The categories included in this section are:

A. General

B. Behavior Disorders

C. Gifted and Talented

D. Hearing Impairments

E. Learning Disabilities

F. Mental Retardation

G. Multihandicapping Conditions

H. Physical Disabilities

III. TEACHING THE CHILD AT HOME

This section includes resources designed to teach parents the skills they need in order to help their children reach their fullest physical, intellectual, social, and emotional potential. These materials range in interest from those on infant stimulation to developing communication skills with adolescents. Some of these materials are designed for workshop presentations, others are for self-study at home. While many of the programs cited have been produced for parents of "normal" children, trainers will find that these are easily adaptable for use with groups of parents of exceptional children.

The categories included in this section are:

A. Basic Child Development

B. Infant Stimulation

C. Behavior Management

D. Preschool Readiness Skills

E. Recreation and Physical Education

F. Speech and Language

G. Self Care and Independent Living Skills

H. Sex Education

I. Academic Skills

J. Affective Development

III A. BASIC CHILD DEVELOPMENT

Resources in this category describe the normal physical, emotional, social and intellectual development of children from birth through adolescence. This listing is by no means comprehensive, but is meant only to suggest the great variety of similar materials currently available from publishers and producers.

IV. PARENT/SCHOOL RELATIONSHIPS

The purpose of this section of the guide is to list resources for parents and educators, which will help each group to work more effectively with the other. The resources for parent use provide information on the educational rights of the handicapped mandated by federal and state laws. These materials also explain the structure of special education, the concepts of mainstreaming and least restrictive environment, and the responsibilities of parents in their partnership role with the professionals in providing an education for the exceptional child. Materials designed for use by special educators provide guidance in developing good conferencing and parent counseling techniques. Many of the professional use materials included in this category provide for the design and implementation of parent involvement programs.

Categories in this section are:

A. Parent Rights and Responsibilities

B. Parent Conferencing and Counseling

C. Parent Involvement Programs

IV A. PARENT RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES

This category includes information to help parents understand the educational rights of their handicapped children as mandated under P.L. 94-142. Special education programming, the contents and development of the IEP (Individualized Education Program) and due process are explained. In addition, these materials are designed to help parents develop an understanding of the skills needed in order to take an active part in their children's education.
